SPECIAL

Probably the best prospect the New York State Police ever let slip through their fingers is Willard Parker, Hollywood's tallest leading man. He had admirable physical qualifications, being six feet, five inches of virile man with light brown hair and steely blue eyes. But these qualifications were equally admirable for another calling, acting, and that is the one he followed. Those six feet five inches of he-man made him a ready choice for his current role of the handsome but greedy politician

Co-starring with Barbara Britton, Philip Reed and Barton MacLane, Parker portrays a scheming man who, in the lawless days following the discovery of gold in California, plots to build an empire there, with himself at its head. However, his plans are thwarted by the daring "Zara", mysterious bandit queen, played by star Barbara Britton, who, leading a large group of night raiders, overthrows the empire and brings peace to the oppressed.

The Southerner

Sam Tucker's love of earth receives full test when he ambitiously decides to become a tenant farmer instead of a migratory worker.

Sam (Zachary Scott) takes his family to their new home. His wife, Nona (Betty Field), tries to adopt a cheerful attitude. She sends the children, Jot and Daisy (Jay Gilpin and Jean Vanderwilt) to play with their dog, Zoonie, while, with her husband, she inspects the dismal quarters. Granny (Beulah Bondi) a gnarled, shrill-tongued ancient, openly berates the young man for bringing his loved ones to such a hole.

Sam's first act is to visit his neighbor, Henry Devers (J. Carroll Naish), who grudgingly grants him permission to draw water from his well. Henry's daughter, Becky (Noreen Roth) and nephew, Finley (Norman Lloyd) are pleasant to the newcomer but the vicissitudes suffered during early years from ruined crops, floods, and the death of his wife from exposure to the elements, have left Devers forever soured. Sam discovers that Devers' one joy is fishing. He is busy making a hook to catch "Lead Pencil", a giant catfish, that hides in the river nearby.

With the arrival of Spring, Sam is able at last to start plowing the ground with Nona's help. Jot is stricken with the dread disease known as pellagra and the village doctor (Jack Norworth) warns the anguished parents that they must get a cow at once and plant vegetables, since Jot must have proper food.

THE FAMOUS NOVEL!

THE STORY

"The Moon and Sixpence" tells an unusual story about an unusual man, a wealthy banker who abandoned his family and Society in order to become an artist. Charles Strickland, played by George Sanders, is the hero of the film, and when he defies the world into which he was born, his travels and adventures resolve into a kaleidoscope of color and movement and sharp contrasts.

He goes from London's fashionable West End to a shabby Parisian garret, to raucous waterfront dives in Marseilles, and on to the magic beauty of a coral isle in the South Seas, storied haven of enchantment for all harried souls seeking escape.
